About Rachel

Rachel is a highly experienced woodwind and piano teacher who specialises in reed (clarinet and saxophone) and has been teaching since the early 2000's. Although her expertise lies in clarinet and saxophone she has a passion for KS1 piano teaching and loves giving young children their first ever music lessons.

Rachel first played the piano at only four years old, and her musical family helped nurture her love for music. Throughout school she picked up the other instruments along the way as well as focusing some of her musical studies on voice. Throughout college and university Rachel sang in a function band and recorded many tracks in the studio. She studied her Bachelor of Music at the University of Surrey where she met a vast number of professional performers and composers and after graduation she began to take her performing to the next level. Rachel has a vast amount of experience at performing over the UK and Europe in different bands and groups and has music recorded and released. Some of her highlights are headlining set at the Small World Stage at Glastonbury Festival and opening the main stage at Guilfest.

Rachel has a 100% success pass rate for all her pupils, mainly with the ABRSM exam board. Even though her exam rate is high she is very supportive of those pupils who do not wish to take that route and who want 'play for fun' (believing that all learning should be fun). Rachel tailors each of her lessons to be individual and unique to her pupil's requirements and needs – she has an interactive style and a passion for creativity.

Rachel's class tuition has been delivered in many schools across the South and has explored unique set ups of class teaching in various different areas. She can often be caught bouncing around a classroom making large, energetic gestures to encourage pupil and build confidence.
